There's a lot more to NEW ORLEANS – the Big Easy, the city that care forgot – than its tourist image as a nonstop party town. At once sordid and sublime, it careers along under an infuriating doublethink. While having enormous amounts of fun, you're liable to be repeatedly struck by the divisions between rich and poor (and, more explicitly, between white and black). Even so, the city's vitality and joie de vivre are real, buffeted but not beaten by the vagaries of commercialism and poverty. The melange of cultures and races that built the city still gives it its heart; not easy, exactly, but quite unlike anywhere else in the States – or the world.

19:00 – Dinner cruise on the "Creole Queen" (Paddle wheel) down the Mississippi River.
